PASADENA'S Tournament of Roses, held on the first day of January for eighteen consecutive years, has become world renowned because of the novelty of a mile-long decorated parade in the middle of winter, where the rigs are covered with millions of natural flowers and greenery.

Having its first inception with the Valley Hunt Club, it has progressed and grown in beauty and attractiveness until it now stands without a peer.

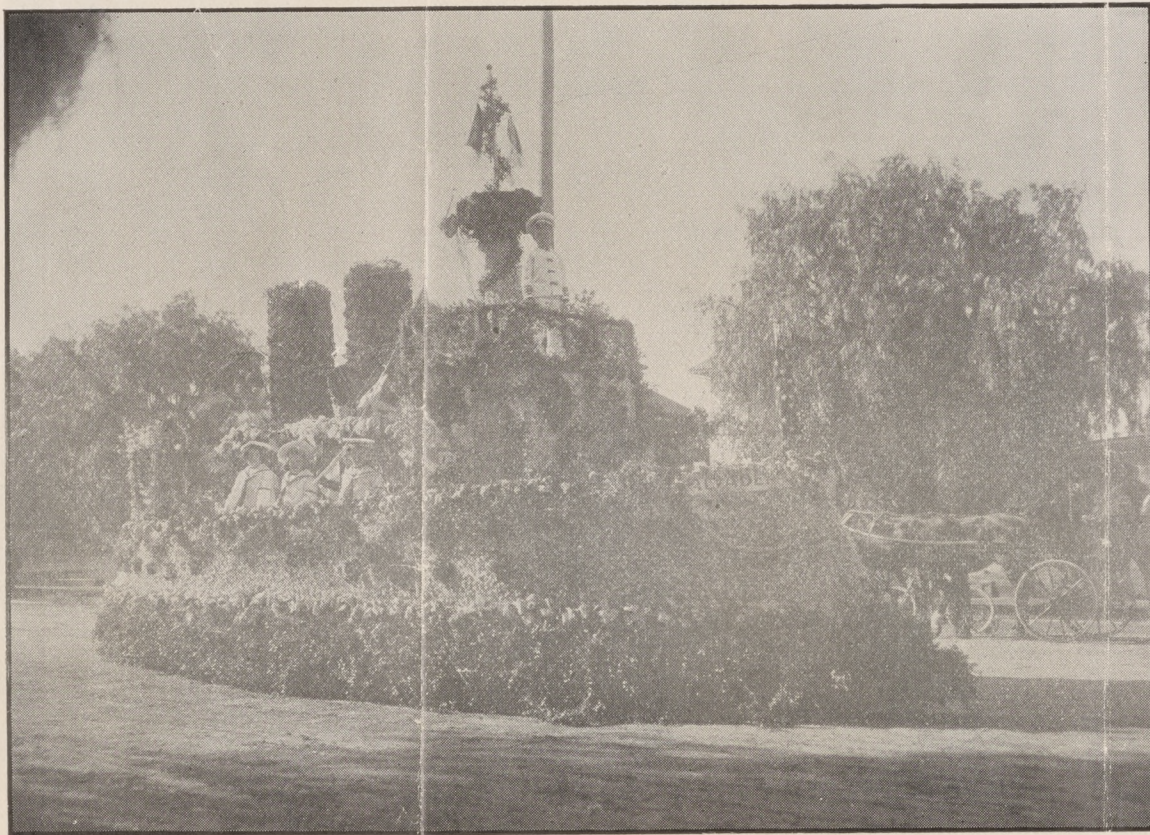

A feature of the afternoon sports introduced two years ago is the chariot race, which is an exact reproduction of the Roman races of olden times. The contestants have been chosen from among the citizens of this section and at no time has professionalism been allowed to enter into the contest. While the city is widely known for its annual Tournament of Roses it is no less well known for its scenic beauty and the culture of its inhabitants. Located on a broad mesa at the foot of the Sierra Madres and within less than thirty miles of the sea, it combines with its acquired advantages those of delightful climatic conditions and geographical location. There are at present about twenty-five thousand residents and the growth in population is rapid and steady. It has a public school system second to none, and nearly every religious denomination is represented, most of them having beautiful places of worship. The residences of the many millionaire residents form a succession of beautiful houses on many of the streets that is unsurpassed by any other city of the same size. Orange Grove avenue, one of the best known boulevards of Pasadena, is called the "mile of millionaires" from the numerous wealthy residents whose homes form a continuous line down either side of the street.

Surrounding Pasadena are many attractive and historical places of interest. A few miles to the south is the old San Gabriel Mission, founded in 1779 by the Franciscan Fathers, still in a good state of preservation and used as a place of worship. It is situated directly on a suburban line of the Pacific Electric railway which connects nearly every city of Southern California with Los Angeles, which is the centre of the system. The Mount Lowe railway, which is part of the system, is perhaps the most scenic division of the road, running as it does up the mountains north of the city. The incline which takes one from Rubio Canyon to Echo Mountain rises fourteen hundred feet and is three thousand feet long. Above this is a trolley line which winds back and forth on the mountain sides, stopping at Alpine Tavern, five thousand feet above sea level. The railway up the mountain is remarkable for the difficult feats of engineering that were accomplished in its construction and the scenic beauties which unfold themselves as one rises higher and higher above the valley stand without a rival.

The beauties of Pasadena and the mildness of its winter climate attract a large number of winter visitors who wish to escape the rigors of the eastern winter, and for their convenience and comfort there has been built in Pasadena some of the most magnificent and largest hotels in the country. The latest hostelry to be built is the Wentworth which stands on the crest of a long bluff south of the city and overlooking the beautiful

San Gabriel valley. It is constructed entirely of reinforced concrete and is as absolutely fire proof as a building can be made. A unique feature is the way that in many places the walls were built around the oak trees to allow of their remaining. The Raymond hotel is another famous house and has been identified with the progress of Pasadena for many years. Located on the crest of a hill it possesses an outlook that makes it one of the finest view points in the city, possessing as it does an uninterrupted view of mountain, valley and, on a clear day, the sea. The Hotel Green is located in the very heart of the city and is the largest hotel in the West. Its two immense buildings are connected with each other by an elevated bridge that spans the dividing avenue and a beautiful park. Just on the eastern edge of the business district is the Maryland, the only one of the four larger hotels that remains open the year round. The past summer has seen large additions made to its accommodations, numerous rooms and a beautiful music room having been added. The Italian pergola, extending several feet from its west wing, is one of the show sights of Pasadena.

Pasadena has given two successful horse shows that rank with the best and next year's exhibition, which will probably be held in March, has the prospect of the entree of some of the finest eastern stables as well as those of this state, which are second to none.

The business district of the city is paved and on either side of the several business streets are shops as cosmopolitan as can be found anywhere in the country.
